

The following message was sent to Endo's research and development employees on October 9, 2014:

Dear R&D –

I just wanted to reach out following today's announcement regarding Endo's agreement to acquire Auxilium to say how excited I am at the prospect for our two companies combining. This transaction represents a great opportunity for Endo. The product portfolio is complementary across our two companies and plays to Endo's key strengths, allowing us to further our goal to be a global specialty healthcare company that improves lives and creates value.

I am especially energized for what it potentially means for R&D. While a talented group of professionals will come together to plan for the integration, I believe the opportunity will be for Endo to bring our expertise and focus to accelerate the growth of Auxilium's XIAFLEX® and Auxilium's other products. XIAFLEX® is an injectable clostridia collagenase enzyme currently approved for Dupuytren's Contracture and Peyronie's Disease that is currently being evaluated for additional indications. We see opportunities to drive increased adoption of XIAFLEX® and accelerate its development in potential new indications.

I believe this is a terrific acquisition for us and although change can bring with it anxiety, I ask you to reflect on our Insigniam hours together, and look to see where you personally can bring positive energy to your group, to R&D and beyond. I look forward to future dialogue with you all at our Insigniam meeting on Monday (calendar invite to come). Also, please don't forget to attend Rajiv's Malvern Town Hall this Friday to learn more about this exciting transaction.

I look forward to seeing everyone soon.

Warm regards,
Sue

- Endo's ability to achieve significant upside potential for shareholders by accelerating the growth of XIAFLEX® and other products of the resultant combined company;
